BUILDING UP OVER '58

Torrance continues to rank third among cities of Los Angeles County in value of building permits with nearly $27,000,000, from January through October. Down from the September figure, Torrance permits amounted to $1,233,350 in October, and its 10-month total is more than $6,000,000 higher than the similar period in 1958. Los Angeles and Long Beach were the only cities ahead of Torrance — the former with $565,000,000, and the latter with $47,000,000.

Councilmen

put in touch with a third assistant, who has no authority to get anything done.

Williams agreed that a board of five persons claiming to represent a population of 6,000,000 is ridiculous and a travesty on democracy. Torrance Mayor Albert Icen said it would be far better to get more supervisors and fewer deputies.

Williams attached great significance to the fact that shrinking of the county's unincorporated area has not reduced county personnel. Nor have county services become more reasonable in price by serving cities under contract.

In Rolling Hills Estates, for example, park and recreation facilities proved to be far more expensive than those the city could supply.

Although the population of the unincorporated county stopped growing years ago, the governing body has not ceased to expand its rule and demands for tax money.

The speaker was introduced by Ray Slaney, Rolling Hills Estates councilman.

The group, The South Bay-Centimela Valley Mayors' and Councilmen's Committee, meets every other month. The next gathering will be held in Culver City the third Thursday in February.

Mrs. A. C. Uglum will direct the junior choir; Mrs. Conrad Hovey is pianist.
